US ARMY LANGUAGE SCHOOL PROGRAMS

In the process of collecting names and addresses of JLS graduates, we used the Roger Pineau Collection. He had collected the names of a number of individuals who had attended the US Army Language Programs in Minnesota and at the University of Michigan. We suspected that the Bentley Library at the University of Michigan might have an interest in the papers of those who had attended the program at UM. They were very interested, even if they do not have an active endeavor to contact such graduates. We sent them the US Army contacts we had found.

One dual graduate of both the Navy and Army programs is William Himel. When we contacted him, he appeared concerned that too much attention was being paid to the Navy interpreters and not enough light was being shed on the Army linguist effort. His concerns developed in the wake of the Pomona Conference and the initiation of our third attempt to contact graduates for papers.

Himel’s wish for institutional cooperation on these issues has led to better communication between collecting facilities. However, concerns regarding an overemphasis on the Navy JLS seem unwarranted. The effort to write the history of US Army Linguists seems farther advanced than that of the US Navy JLS and its graduates. Since the government has mainly published the studies regarding the Army schools, they have not received the publicity that privately published works necessarily require.

A Humbling Experience

You should know that for the last day of conversation class, our Sensei (teacher) had promised a sample of what we would experience in a war zone. We six sat as he entered our second floor classroom in the campus library that lovely, cool, June day. We exchanged Ohayo gozaimasun (formal good morning). Sensei removed a Japanese newspaper from his briefcase, placed his pocket watch on the table, and began a fifty-five minute reading, without pause.

We took this to be a challenge of what we had learned in fifty weeks of concentrated effort—our concentration was intense. Within ten minutes I concluded that I was understanding only about one quarter of the reading, and sweat began seeping from every pore. When Sensei finished, he folded the paper into his briefcase, pocketed his watch, wished us Gokigenyo (good luck), and departed. We sat there in a state of communal shock. We rose, moving out of the room and down the stairs, in a sort of zombie-like trance. I suppose we were all conjuring up the horror of being confronted with that kind of Japanese in a combat situation.

I was walking silently along giside Hy Kublin when we reached the open air. He stopped, turned to me, and declared, “Rog, if I were on a flagship and was summoned by the admiral to listen to a Japanese radio broadcast like that, I know just what I’d do.” Since I was experiencing similar frightening scenarios, I implored, “Tell me Hy, what would you do?”

Hy replied, “I’d sit down in front of the radio speaker, and listen intently for about half a minute. If what I heard was coming out like Sensei’s reading, I’d stand up, look the admiral square in the eye and say, ‘Sir, the dirty bastards have switched to Korean.”

Papers

Processed

Ms. Lena Potyondy, having finished stabilizing and preserving the Roger Pineau Collection, has also been processing the William Hudson Papers. Although this collection already had a preliminary inventory, it had yet to receive full processing. Full processing includes removing old paper clips, staples, rubber bands, and any such material likely to corrode. Old manila folders are replaced by acid-free folders, and moved to acid-free boxes.

 Aside from preservation, refoldering and reboxing, we also create a guide, including a cover page, an abstract, a biography, a scope & content, and a container list. The abstract is used in cataloging, the short biography provides context for the researcher, and the scope & content explains the organization of the materials. The container list itemizes the boxes and folders within the collection.

The Japanese Language School Archival Project

In the Spring of 2000, the Archives continued the original efforts of Captain Roger Pineau and William Hudson, and the Archives first attempts in 1992, to gather the papers, correspondence, photographs, and records of graduates of the US Navy Japanese Language School, University of Colorado at Boulder, 1942-1946. We assemble these papers in recognition of the contributions made by JLS graduates to the War effort in the Pacific, the successful occupation of Japan, the creation of Japanese language programs across the country, and the development of cultural reconciliation programs after World War II.
To Donate

If you wish to donate your materials, please contact the Archives to insure the proper mailing address. For large shipments, the archives will reimburse expenses. Upon receipt of materials we will send the donator a deed of gift with instructions. The donator must return to the Archives signed deeds of gift. The Archives will then provide copies of preliminary inventories and guides to donors and donor families when available. Feel free to contact us at any time.

History, EAL&C & Ethnic Studies
To Assist Archives

Faculty from three departments will be meeting and coordinating with the Archives to plan and assist with events highlighting the Japanese Language School Project. Professors Yonemoto (Japanese History), Rodd and Snyder (East Asian Languages & Civilizations) and Hirabayashi (Ethnic Studies) are considering at least two events in Boulder during the next two years, an academic symposium and a JLS reunion.
